

Learning English with kids.

It's clear, that learning of a foreign language is not easy. There are lots of specific phrases and grammar rules, which are supposed to be used correctly. There are no exceptions. All the same with English.

Brief learning is not difficult, but if you're going to use English a lot, you'll have to learn it hard. As a rule, kids are more successful in learning, because they remember things better.

Teachers and scientists proved it long time ago, but there is a problem - kids are very active and can't sit on one place. If they lose their interest to learn English, it'll be difficult to make it interesting for them again.

What to start with?

So how to make children learn English with a big interest and enthusiasm? First of all, you should tell them how perspective it will be, if English becomes their second native language. Set some good example for them. Wonderful stories could awake their interest to learn English.

The second step is bright pictures associated with English words and phrases. They will help children to remember information better and will attract their attention to the process of studying. Other than pictures, different animations and games in English could be useful as well.

Very important is not to make learning too difficult for a child. He can't study during the whole hour like adults. He will not go away of course, but he will remember just a little piece of the information he gets. He might start gaping, turning his head from one side to another, etc.

That's why it's very important to take breaks in studies and concentrate kids' attention on something else. When they have rest, they will do their best to succeed in learning and to achieve new goals.

The method of a carrot and stick is a bad choice for studying English with children. This way you'll only make kids lose their enthusiasm. They will think up everything just to escape from classes. Try to reward your child as much as possible.

Don't be upset if your kid can't understand something. You can learn it again next time. Children should never feel quality.

Please notice, that it will be much easier for children to learn English collectively. So they will have more fun together. Talking to other kids will make your child feel great, and then he will look forward to the next lessons very much!
