Английский или немецкий?

Hello my friends! The first work week of a new study year has finished. I truly hope you had a great one!

I remember that I always liked the first days at school and Uni after summer vacations. I liked to meet my groupmates and tell them how I spent the summer. And I was always glad to hear the same from them. It was pretty cool!

My friends in this article I'm going to talk about two languages English and German. Do you think what of them is more important nowadays? If now you're thinking of what language you should choose for you or your children, I think that this post will help you with it.

Once again looking back at my school time I remember that I also had to decide what foreign language I'd like to learn. When I passed to the fifth grade I could choose between English and German. To be honest I don't remember why I made up my mind to start learning English. But now I understand that I made a right chose. And I'm going to explain you why.

First of all, the English language is more popular in the World. Wherever you go you can communicate with people in English. German is not World language. All countries I've been to, nobody could speak German, but everyone spoke English at least a little. And pretty interesting that German people as a rule speak English pretty well, but British ones don't focus on learning German too much during a life. And when we were in London we didn't hear German speech at all.

Second of all German is more difficult. I talked to many tutors and everyone told me the same: «German and English are similar to some extent, but English is easier». That's true that these two languages have common moments as they belong to the Germanic group of languages. But anyway English is easier to learn.

The third reason to learn English is that all employers require it. When I was looking for a new job I noticed that even German companies could give you a job if you don't speak German, but know English. And by the way I work in a German company as well. I don't speak German, but use my English when I need it and have no problems with it. As I said before German people speak English pretty well.

So my friends I advise you to choose English as the second language for you or your children. Learn English and then you can learn German as well. It's not a problem. But English is definitely first!

And what do you think on this point?

Good luck guys!
